In the present situation, there are many websites like bharath matrimony, shaadi.etc which are helping users to find matches.

This project aims at creating a full-fledged website for Matrimony. It basically involves viewing the details of the bride, bridegroom or both. The technical and the commercial scope involved in developing and implementing the project “Matrimonial Website” has been discussed.

The main aim of the matrimonial website is to develop a web portal through which users who are looking for partners for wedded life can submit their profile and update photos and find the perfect match for marriage. The user can just browse through the site and can post or submit his/her details by registering himself as a valid User.

This Website is exclusive for the Hindus and has extensive database matching based on the caste and stars.

USERS

The project is divided into two sections

I)USER

II)ADMINISTRATOR

The Users of the site can browse or look for details for a match, for the bride or bridegroom. There are two types of users as one would normally have on any website. The first is the casual or unregistered user who can only look for details that match the individual's criteria.

These users can also make use of the search option that has been provided. The another type is the registered user who can avail every option of the casual user and also has the option of posting or submitting his/her own details. But, before posting the details, the user has to register with the site. Upon registering and becoming a valid user of the site, the user will be given a username and password wherein, he/she could change the details or add more details to it.

The administrator, on the other hand, has to check every registered user, as a valid user and is also responsible for the overall maintenance of the site. It involves validation of records, removal of redundant entries, username uniqueness checking, setting a time period for the expiry of user details and check for expiry.

The problem definition is simply a statement in narrow terms, of what the problem is and defines the nature of the current system in terms of the whole problem that has to be solved by the outcome of the project. This project has been prepared with the intent of creating a full-fledged website for matrimony. Currently, no on-line site exists for such a system, where users can enjoy submitting the details of the bride or bridegroom for a match.

The client system does hold a system where in every request is fed by the person in charge, to whom it is mailed. The listings of all the user details as requested by the user are automatically generated by the system itself and given to the user.

The requirement statement needed by the client organization concentrates on the need of a portal which deals with maintenance and holding a database for bride, groom and not for match making. Such a system requires heavy administration facilities and an attractive user-interface for site browsing.

The problem statement can be simply defined as the need to create and maintain a website for matrimonial purposes. The above-mentioned statement is just an epitome of the whole project.

Through the details look simple enough, there would be a study of the client's requisites for this project. The requirement study for the system analysis phase requires the comprehension of 'what' the client needed, than 'how' it has to be achieved.

FEASIBILITY STUDY

A feasibility study is a process to check possibilities of system development. It is a method to check various different requirements and availability of financial & technical resources.

Before starting the process various parameters must be checked like:

- ❖ Estimated finance is there or not?
- ❖ The man power to operate the system is there or not?
- ❖ The man power is trained or not?

All the above conditions must be satisfied to start the project. This is why in depth analysis of feasibility is carried out.

There are three different ways feasibility can be tested:

- ✧ Economical Feasibility
- ✧ Technical Feasibility
- ✧ Operational Feasibility.

Economical Feasibility:

In economic feasibility, analysis of the cost of the system is carried out. The system should be only developed if it is going to get rid off the current manual system user can get the price only by purchasing the newspapers. In addition, if he/she wants to see archives of particular equity then he has to refer to all the old newspapers. For research reports, he has to buy another magazine. So Instead of buying no of magazines user has to just go online and with a single click, he can get whatever information he wants. So our project of online share news passes the test of economic feasibility.

Technical Feasibility:

It is basically used to see existing computer, hardware and software etc., whether it is sufficient or additional equipments are required? Minimum System Requirement is such that it can be affordable by of the user who is having a computer. All that the user requires is compatible browser and .net framework installed so our system is fully technical feasible.

Operational Feasibility:

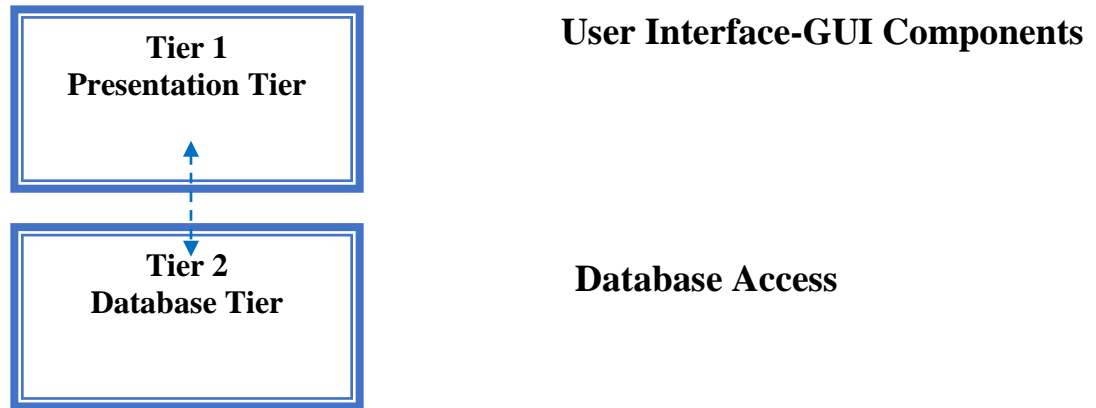

Once the system is designed there must be a trained and expert operator. If they are not trained they should be given training according to the needs of the system.

From the user's perspective, our system is fully operational and feasible as it just requires some knowledge of computer. Operators only need to add daily changes and there are enough validations available so the operator does not require any special technical knowledge. So our system also passes the test of operational feasibility.
